Manager Commentary

Equity markets in the Asia Pacific ex Japan region delivered mixed returns in December. In general, stocks gained in the first half of the month, boosted by signs that China was relaxing its strict zero-COVID policy, before falling back towards month-end as Chinese COVID-19 infection levels soared and major central banks reaffirmed their hawkish stance. Chinese equities rebounded strongly at the start of December amid growing evidence that the authorities were starting to pivot away from their strict zero-COVID policy. While confirmed cases fell as testing requirements were loosened, actual cases soared as restrictions were lifted: unconfirmed reports suggested that around half of residents in some major cities had contracted the virus due to the highly contagious Omicron variant. Shares slumped once more as this surge in infection levels caused many people to stay at home, leading to further supply chain disruptions as factories closed and delivery drivers became ill. Australian shares lost ground over December. The Reserve Bank of Australia raised rates by 25 basis points (bps) to a 10-year high of 3.1% and indicated that further hikes would be needed to bring inflation under control. Stocks in South Korea and Taiwan also retreated in December as economic concerns weighed on tech shares, but Hong Kong shares advanced, helped by news that the territory was to scrap some of its final COVID-19 restrictions and by Beijing's pivot towards growth. ASEAN markets retreated modestly over December. Thailand and Malaysia advanced modestly but shares in Singapore retreated. Stocks in the Philippines and Indonesia fell even more as central banks in both markets raised rates to their highest level since 2009.
