Manager Commentary

The MSCI Asia Pacific ex Japan Index rebounded sharply over January with sentiment lifted by growing optimism over China's reopening and by a further easing in inflationary pressures in major economies. A weaker tone to the US dollar was also supportive for the region. Chinese equities soared over January. Mainland China indices hit five-month highs, amid growing optimism that the economy would rebound once the current COVID-19 exit wave has passed. Economic data for January was stronger-than-expected, despite high infection levels, with Chinese citizens welcoming the lifting of travel restrictions in time for the Lunar New Year celebrations. In less positive news, the Biden administration stopped issuing licences allowing US companies to export to Huawei, while Japan and the Netherlands agreed to restrict exports of chip manufacturing tools to China. Hong Kong stocks also rallied over the month, with the Hang Seng Index coming within touching distance of a 10-month high. Australian stocks rallied, closing the month near a nine-month high, Australia's inflation rate rose to 7.8% in the fourth quarter of 2022, the highest level in 33 years, due to the rising cost of energy and new homes. The data increases the chance that the Reserve Bank of Australia will continue to hike rates. Elsewhere, shares in Taiwan and South Korea delivered double-digit gains, helped by strong returns from index heavyweights TSMC, Samsung and SK Hynix. The Bank of Korea raised interest rates by 25 basis points in January. ASEAN markets lagged the broader region, dragged down by small declines in Malaysia, Indonesia and Thailand. In contrast, Singapore and the Philippines gained. Shares in Singapore traded around nine-month peaks after the city state's annual inflation rate eased to 6.5% in December, the lowest level in seven months. Singapore's GDP grew by 3.8% in 2022, slightly above the government's projection for a 3.5% annual expansion. Japanese equities delivered solid gains in January. Core inflation (which excludes food) hit a 41-year high of 4.0% in December, while core core inflation (which excludes both food and energy) reached a 30-year high of 3.0%. Nevertheless, the Bank of Japan maintained its ultra-loose monetary policy, saying that wage growth was not strong enough to achieve its inflation target on a sustainable basis.
