Manager Commentary

Most of the Asian equities rebounded in the month of July as market begins taking a view that the global inflation could see its peak soon as shown through the recent drawdown in commodity prices and easing global supply chain tightness. The China related markets corrected in the month of July after posting strong gain in June amid concerns on signs of renewed crackdown on the tech sector to an escalation of the crisis engulfing property developers and a rebound in covid-19 cases in the country.

US equity market posted strong gains in the month of July, as investors focus now shift towards potential Fed pivot in 4Q22 given the potential economy slowdown ahead as Fed aggressively raises its interest rate outlook. Market is also looking forward to peak of US inflation as several leading indicators are pointing to one.
