Manager Commentary

LQ45 fell -2.17% on total return basis during November. Some of the investors remained on the sideline given the emergence of the newly mutated Omicron variant by month's end. Foreign investors ended their 6 months inflow streak as they sold USD215m worth of equities. Consumer discretionary counters faced selling pressure as investors continued to shun them given the low visibility in earning growth. The telecom sector outperformed the market as it delivered strong quarterly numbers. The deceleration was expected given the second COVID wave back in June. Bank Indonesia (BI) maintained the policy rate at 3.5% while expressing its confidence in the economy's ability to deal with the upcoming US tapering. Our market trend and momentum assessment of the Indonesian stock market stayed in positive territory over the month, although the signal outlook has begun to decelerate. As a result, we maintained a full investment positioning throughout November.

The portfolio outperformed the benchmark in the month of November. Positive stock selections in the consumer discretionary and material sector contributed most to the performance. The overweight positions in the financial counters, however, offset some of the outperformance.
