Manager Commentary

Global equities closed November sharply higher, recording their first back-to-back monthly gains since mid-2021, as signs that inflationary pressures may be lessening sparked hopes that central banks may become less aggressive in raising rates. Sentiment was also lifted by speculation that China may start to ease its strict zero-COVID policy. In general, emerging markets outperformed developed markets. Global bonds rallied on hopes that central banks may start to reduce the pace at which they raise rates. The yield on the 10-year US Treasury bond closed November around 3.7%, a decline of around 30 basis points (bps) over the month. As the economic outlook continued to darken, central banks continued to raise rates to combat inflation. In the US, the Federal Reserve (Fed) implemented its fourth successive 75-bps rate hike, taking rates to a range of 3.25% to 4.0%. However, hopes grew that future rate increases may be smaller after inflation data in the US and euro zone for November was lower than forecast. Fed chair Jay Powell also hinted that it may be appropriate to slow the pace of US interest rates rises. The US dollar weakened as investors reassessed the pace at which the Fed is expected to raise rates following the lower-than-forecast US inflation data for October. US stocks moved higher over November, ending the month on a strong note as Federal Reserve (Fed) chair Jay Powell suggested it may be appropriate to slow the pace of US rate rises. The broad-based S&P 500 index outperformed the tech-heavy Nasdaq Index as value shares outpaced growth-oriented companies. US GDP growth for the third quarter was revised up to an annualised rate of 2.9%, but economic momentum appears to be weakening in the fourth quarter. The flash estimate of S&P Global's US composite purchasing managers' index (PMI) dropped to 46.3 in November from 48.2 in October. The manufacturing PMI fell to 47.6, signalling the first contraction in US manufacturing activity since the height of the pandemic in mid-2020. Meanwhile, activity in the services sector slid to a lower-than-expected 46.1, the second-fastest rate of contraction on record, excluding the early stages of the pandemic, as high inflation and rising interest rates hit demand. US inflation eased to 7.7% in October, the smallest 12-month increase since January, while core inflation fell to a year-on-year rate of 6.3%, compared with 6.6% in September. At a sector level, materials stocks led the market advance, with industrials also outperforming the broader market by a sizeable margin. In contrast, consumer discretionary companies lagged due, in part, to weak returns from Tesla. Meanwhile, the energy sector was held back by falling oil prices.

Asia markets also extended its gain in November, underpinned by higher-than-expected 3Q22 results, as well as the expectation of China reopening in 1Q23. Recent Less-hawkish Fed officials commentary also helped to fuel the rally in global equities including Asian market. The European markets also posted strong gain in November as Euro area headline inflation fell more than expected. Headline inflation for Euro area fell to 10.0% YoY in November (from 10.6% in October) vs consensus of 10.4%. This marked as the biggest downside surprise in this inflation cycle and the first decline since mid-2021. US equities extended its gain in November as lower than expected October CPI print provided relief to the market that Fed rate hike cycle could finally be coming to an end sooner than expected. During a recent meeting, the Fed's Powell also came out with a slightly less hawkish tone which the market digested as the possibility for a soft landing. November private payrolls data shows the slowing growth trend where November ADP private payrolls numbers increased by 127K vs consensus for 198K, showing job growth slowed by the most since January 2021 which was adding to the slowing growth narrative.
