Manager Commentary

In line with most global markets, China and Hong Kong equities declined over October. The main issue is that although most recent economic data in China has improved somewhat, nonetheless the recent stabilization remains fragile and largely unconvincing. In particular, the property crunch has not yet been resolved. Prices of both new and existing homes continued to fall modestly in September. The price declines have been particularly noticeable outside the largest ('tier 1') cities. As such, the ongoing property weakness is an important contributory factor to the subdued level of consumption and high savings rates. In the face of these challenges, government policy continues to adjust in search of the right balance between structural and cyclical priorities. Indeed there was an eye-catching announcement this month when China's top legislature approved RMB 1 trillion (c. USD 130 billion) of additional central government bonds to fund infrastructure projects. It is estimated this will add around 0.8% to GDP.
