Manager Commentary

The Fund lagged the benchmark in August. Although the index return ended close to flat for the month, there was significant volatility during the period. There was also a high level of rotation within the market. For example, there was almost a 25% dispersion between the best performing sector (Energy) and the worst (Health Care). Our relatively close-to-benchmark sector positions helped mitigate the performance impact from sector allocations, but the market rotation led to significant profit-taking in some stocks that had previously performed well.

At a single stock level, a top detractor was Will Semiconductor, China's leading semiconductor design house. The stock saw some profit-taking after a strong run, with the catalyst being slightly weaker-than-expected quarterly results. In the long term, we expect the company to be a beneficiary of China's need to become self-sufficient in key strategic areas such as semiconductor production. On the other hand, a top contributor was a photoelectric equipment manufacturer. Previously viewed by the market as a silicon solar cell production equipment company, the catalyst for the strong share price move was an ongoing re-rating following the announcement of new orders in its semiconductor equipment operations. The company has invested heavily in its semiconductor business over recent years, and the move to mass production should provide a further growth driver.
