Manager Commentary

Asia equity market corrected further in the month of September on the back of hawkish statement by the Fed that sent 10Y US government yield up by 47bps MoM to 4.58%. US Equity market also posted negative return in September as investors starting to price in a high chance that we may be living in a higher interest rate environment for longer period of time on the back of still stubborn inflation that is still above the Fed's desired target of 2%. Asia ex Japan equities slid as sentiment was knocked by worries that US rates would stay higher for longer. Stocks in Greater China were among the weakest performers. A stronger tone to the US dollar also weighed on returns in USD terms. Chinese equities declined over September. While economic data remained weak, it showed a modest improvement compared with recent months. In addition, there was growing optimism that a series of stimulus measures from Beijing could bolster China's economic recovery. The People's Bank of China maintained its key rate, the one-year loan prime rate, at 3.45% but reduced banks' reserve requirement ratio by 25 basis points. The Chinese central bank also said it would step up policy adjustments and implement monetary policy in a "precise and forceful" manner to support the economy. Australian shares retreated over the month. The Reserve Bank of Australia kept rates on hold at 4.1%, but emphasised that, while inflation may have passed its peak, it remains too high and further monetary tightening may be needed. The tech-heavy markets of Taiwan and South Korea also fell, with semiconductor stocks negatively affected by news that TSMC had warned that the recent boom in artificial intelligence interest was not sufficient to offset a broader slowdown in demand. Hong Kong shares fell sharply, as the problems at real estate developers intensified. ASEAN markets mostly lost ground, although returns in the Philippines and Singapore were positive. While central banks mostly kept rates on hold, Thailand's central bank unexpectedly raised its key interest rate by 25 basis points to 2.50% during its September 2023 meeting, pushing borrowing costs to the highest level since late 2013. Japanese equities withstood the broader stock market sell-off over September, closing the month slightly higher. Compared with other markets, shares were supported by the Bank of Japan's continued dovish stance. Sentiment was also lifted by reports that Prime Minister Fumio Kishida had instructed his cabinet to develop a new economic package to alleviate the impact of inflation and support the economy through increased wages and investments.
