BI Estimates Foreign Exchange Reserves in December 2020 Could Breach 135 Billion US Dollars

Bank Indonesia (BI) estimates that foreign exchange reserves at the end of December 2020 could be more than 135 billion US dollars. This means that the foreign exchange reserves at the end of 2020 will be higher than the position in November 2020 which amounted to 133.6 billion US dollars. "Because lately there has not been much stabilization, while additional foreign exchange reserves from several sources continue to show an increase," said Executive Director of the BI Monetary Management Department, Nanang Hendarsah, Tuesday (5/1/2020). He is also optimistic that the increase in foreign exchange reserves will continue in 2021 due to the opening up of funding sources, such as the issuance of large government global bonds. In addition, the increase in foreign exchange reserves will also be supported by market conditions that will be more conducive and conditions of economic fundamentals will be stable, so that the central bank will not carry out much more stabilization.

United Kingdom Apply Third National Quarantine

Schools and universities across the UK were closed Tuesday, ahead of the start of the third national quarantine on Wednesday. This step was taken to control the spike in new cases of the Covid-19 corona virus, along with the emergence of new variants in recent months, which could paralyze the health system because it is believed to spread more quickly. The new tight restrictive measures were announced Monday night by British Prime Minister (PM) Boris Johnson. At that time the UK also started rolling out the Covid-19 vaccination with the vaccine made by Oxford-AstraZeneca. Scotland started the quarantine on Tuesday. As for the rest of the UK, said Johnson, it will start on Wednesday. This third national quarantine is likely to last until mid-February 2021.
